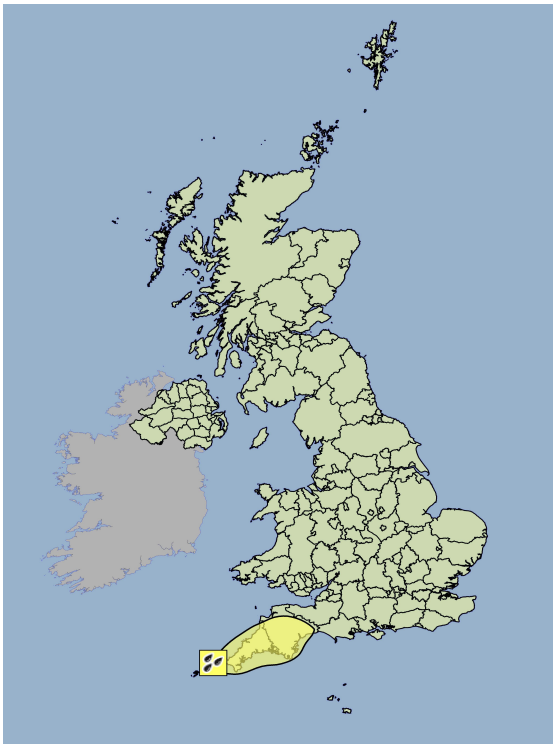
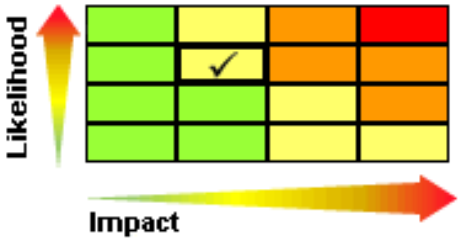
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Heavy showers are likely to develop on Friday across Devon and Cornwall. The wind setup may be favourable for these to develop into slow-moving bands of downpours that could affect some locations for a number of hours. This could lead to localised flooding and standing water on roads, whilst some locations are likely to miss the showers completely. The public are advised to remain in touch with the forecast.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Rain

Valid from 11:00 on Fri, 17th May 2013 until 20:00 on Fri, 17th May 2013

Slow-moving, heavy showers are expected to affect parts of southwest England on Friday, especially through the afternoon and early evening.

The public should be aware of the potential for localised travel disruption.
